When breezy Mrs. Jack made her first appearance, neatly catching on the fly a basket that in the confusion of the stage business at the time was tosed towards the side where she entered, there was a storm of applause. It was a minute or more before she could proceed. Her smiles and bowed acknowledgements were deeply appreciative of a tribute, the sincerity and cordiality of which there could be no mistaking. Her career on the stage, since she first chose it as a profession has been noted with a confidence born of conviction that the highest achievement of the stage were within the range of her abilities. And so when, after a period of apprenticeship, a play was written for her and the title role gave opportunity for the display of her genius, she won instant recognition from New York asc a star of first magnitude there wasn't one of us Terre Hauteans who didn't wag his or her wise head and say, with at satisfaction too, "I told you so."

The "I told you so's" were out in froce last night, in their best clothes, as be-fitted the coming of the Queen.

Of the play of Mrs. Jack, a farcical comedy in three acts, written by Grace Livingston Furniss for Miss Fischer, special mention need not be made now. Not because it does not deserve it, however, for as a matter of fact it is an exceptionally bright and breezy production. But on the occasion of its first production at Wallack's theatre, New York, a synopsis of it was printed in the Gazette, from one of the New York papers. Several times since the plot of the play has been given. Besides half of the people in Terre Haute, at all interested in theatricals were present last night. And the other half will be there tonight. It was written especially for Miss Fischer and gives opportunity for the display of those very capabilities in which she is without a peer on the stage. Generosity, unconventionality, bubbling humor, trustfulness founded on trustworthiness, truthfulness, hatred of hypocrisy and contempt for shams, capability of falling heels over head in love and inability to conceal it—these are the characteristics of Mrs. Jack. words straight to every heart. There was a suspicious moisture in every eye.

The curtain dropped and rose again on a surprise—a complete surprise to Miss Fischer and to all but a few on the stage and in the audience. Mr. W. D. Chaffin, acting manager stepped to the front and introduced Col. Wm. E. McLean.

Mrs. Fischer could be seen by some in the audience looking out from behind one of the side scenes, wondering what was coming. She said afterwards that she guessed it might be some welcome address or presentation of the mythical key of the city or something of that sort. At any rate she was led on the stage by Mr. Chaffin, and the Colonel stepped forward and greeted her. "How do you do Colonel," she said with charming naivete and then as he began to speak said "take the center of the stage," motioning him thither. Facing him, her hand resting on the back of a chair, smiling at him and at the audience in turn, interjecting little remarks of appreciation, she and the audience listened to the following address, punctuated frequently by the applause of the audience.

"Some of your admiring friends have cast me for a part, in this evening's entertainment, not 'on the bills,' and for which, I regret to say, I have no well chosen lines.

"Your friends in this city, and I take pleasure in saying that they embrace all of that part of our population who had th pleasure of knowing you, in those bright, happy days of the past—when, without the aid of foot lights or stage effects you played the charming role of Terre Haute girlhood, and, like your part here tonight, it was a star part you played then, these friends have watched, with zealous interest, your career since you left your home here to win metropolitan honors in your chosen profession.

"For week's you had New York at your feet. Tonight your old home bids 'Welcome, thrice welcome' to her acknowledged star.

"The brilliant success you have achieved, by one night's triumph, in reaching the top-most round upon the dazzling ladder of Dramatic Fame is most gratifying to us all.

"Of course, we all know you must succeed, for, in the bright lexicon of your Terre Haute girlhood, there was no such word as fail.

"You—Miss Alice—are not 'the girl from Paris,' you are pre-eminently the girl from Terre Haute—Terre Haute on the banks of the Wabash far away.

"Terre Haute first discovered you—first brought you out, first discovered and proclaimed your genius.

"People must be amused as well as buried, and we here all prefer the former

—hence are glad that we have 22 with us tonight, to amuse us after the Heavens have been weeping for more than a week.

"But a pleasing task has been allotted me, and I perform it with genuine satisfaction, greeting you in behalf of your friends who have selected me as their spokesman."

At this point in his address, a great gold-lined silver loving cup was brought on the stage and handed to the Colonel. Holding it in his hands he continued:

"I have the honor and the pleasure to present you, in their name, this handsome loving cup, as a fitting tribute to the zeal, the energy, the high devotion to your profession which has ever marked your career. A loving cup can only come from loving friends and warm hearts. It carries with it a significance which mere words cannot express. Its contemplation must ever awaken the fondest, the tenderest recollections which can animate your heart. Come again, Mrs. Jack and bring your fine company with you. Come often."

"Come in the evening, come in the morning,

Come when you are looked for, come without warning.

Kisses and welcome you'll find here before you,

The oftener you come here, the more we'll adore you."

This was when the Colonel was surprised. For on this urgent invitation what did Mrs. Alice Fischer Jack do but step up to the Colonel and imprint, full and fair on his lips, a chaste salute. The Colonel actually blushed, which he really need not have done for it was an official salute, and was meant for the whole audience. At any rate that is the way the audience took it. So amidst a salvo of applause the curtain fell.

It was one of the most brilliant audiences ever assembled at the Grand very many of those present were in full evening dress, making it appear more like a reception, which it really was than a theatre audience, as audiences are here.

In the west box were Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Fischer, father and mother of the star, Misses Eva Hollinger and Ruby Crapo, her neices, Mrs. R. L. Ball, Mrs. Gregory, of Muncie and Mr. Robinson. In the east box were Mr. and Mrs. John R. Crapo, Mrs. Eva Hollinger, Rev. and Mrs. John E. Sulger and Miss Eleanor Cox.

A car load of special scenery for the play made each stage setting of the three acts distinctive and beautiful. The mount-of the piece was superb.

In honor of the occasion the new drop curtain was displayed for the first time. It is a very attractive one and elicited

Flowers have been received at all hours of the rival of their distinguished daughter. Only a small per cent were ordered to the theater.

Tonight Dr. and Mrs. Crapo will give a supper to the members of the company at their home, instead of at the Fischer house as announced. There are fourteen in the company.

Mr. George Schaeffer, the capital butler who has an important part in the play, says he has been coming to Terre Haute for fifteen years with Charles Frohman's companies but never saw such a brilliant audience in this city before.

One of the floral gifts put over the foot lights was from "The Pearl Seekers," members of Miss Fischer's Sunday school class of St. Stephen's church. Those living here now are: Mrs. Francis Hord, Mrs. A. Z. Foster, Miss Cora O'Boyle and Miss Carrie Hyde.

Mr. H. Hulman selected the loving cup. Three were sent from Tiffany's for a choice. Mr. Hulman's well known refined taste as exemplified in the decorations of St. Benedict's church was shown in his selection. The cup is tall, graceful with two handles, lined with gold.

Miss Fischer made a request that the Rev. and Mrs. John E. Sulger should occupy places in one of the family boxes.
